The Loomex Group Ltd. Teams Up with Delta Wildfire Response

Peterborough, Ontario: The Loomex Group Ltd. is pleased to announce that it has teamed up with Delta Wildfire Response, a prominent British Columbia firm that specializes in flood mitigation, wildfire structure fire protection, and water supply options. This decision joins together two companies that share core values and a belief in building long-term relationships to help communities become stronger and more resilient in the face of emergencies.

Delta Wildfire Response has extensive experience working with remote communities across Canada. A statement issued by Alex Patterson, wildfire response manager, and Wes Brassard, operations supervisor, said, “We look forward to working closely with The Loomex Group to provide wildfire and flood response services across Ontario.”

“This relationship was forged because of the increased number of natural disasters that are threatening life, property, and the environment,” said Trent Gervais, president and CEO of The Loomex Group Ltd. “Loomex and Delta both offer cutting-edge technology and skilled teams, along with the ability to expand services across Ontario, reacting quickly when disaster strikes.”

The new collaboration will greatly benefit responders and communities in Ontario—especially remote areas and First Nations communities. For example, Delta Wildfire Response uses systems that are designed for portability, structure protection, and long water delivery scenarios that maximize coverage levels in and around critical infrastructure. Collectively, the companies offer a combination of technical expertise and specialized equipment that is not widely available in the province.

As Mr. Gervais said, “We know that no community can fully control when an emergency will occur, but we want to make sure there are resources available to help them respond effectively and build back better.”
